

find more at coopzine.wordpress.com

COOP

chickens of our poetry

An art and poetry zine

Editor's note

Rook

This edition of COOP is particularly exciting for us. We've had more submissions and submitters than we've ever had before, and the quality of submissions has been excellent. We are publishing our first short story and our first traditional art pieces. Represented among the poetry are all the different moods of chickens, from the silly absurdism of "Cacklefarts" to the heartfelt grief of "Vincent," from the thoughtful introspection of "Riddle" to the lighthearted humor of "chicks at the store."

I am so happy that COOP gets to be the publication that shares this art with the world. Thank you so much to all our submitters, thank you to alliyah, and thank you dear reader, for giving this quirky little zine a read.

With every new edition for COOP, I feel as if we've taken a huge stride. The world is that much richer in chicken poetry and art. We've come that much further as a publication, with one more edition under our belt. Let's do another. Let's look ahead to more sunny-side-up mornings and inspire chicken lovers everywhere to create their art and write their poetry. Let's cut loose, be free, and think about those beloved, befeathered little dinosaurs that humanity has been obsessed with for millennia.

Editor's note

alliyah

Well the COOP zine has hatched again and we have more chickens than ever! Thank you for finding your way to the zine, I hope you've enjoyed the read. This was a fun edition to see come to life. As with each new edition of COOP, I've been so impressed by the range of emotions and subjects that fit within this chicken theme. This time around we were pleased to even accept a short story and embroidery piece within the pages.

One of the most challenging and exciting pieces of the editing process is figuring out with Rook what order the works will fall into; arranging the sweep of emotion of the edition. In this one you'll find moments of humor, sorrow, light-hearted care, whimsy, brooding, and nostalgia. I'd like to think that chickens work as a beautifully feathered blank canvass ready to hold this diverse landscape of poetry and art. It's exciting when the pieces are finally put in place, working together, each one becoming a part of a vision and conversation. Art and poetry can't exist in a vacuum, but always ideally finds themselves in a greater conversation.

If you'd like to join the conversation at COOP, please consider submitting your piece to the next edition. Our message is to get creative, pick up the pencil or paintbrush, and don't be afraid to share your work! Thank you again for playing a part in that mission by reading and sharing COOP - keep creating, the world could use your voice!

COOP

chickens of our poetry

Edition #4

This zine is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivatives 4.0 International license.

Distribution Notice: This publication may be reproduced, distributed, or transmitted in any form including digital distribution in part or in whole without the prior written permission of the publisher as long as proper attribution and original author credit are included. All poems and art remain intellectual property of the original author and may not be reproduced for commercial purposes without original author permission.

First printing edition November 2022.

Cover font: Cooper Black

Heading font: Farm House FS by Farz Studio

Body font: Goudy Old Style

For submission and publication inquiries please contact us at coopzine@gmail.com or visit us on our website, coopzine.wordpress.com

When finished, please pass on or recycle!

Content Warning: Some poems portray animal death.

Blessing

Whitney Gratton

I wish you hens upon hens upon hens – to the seventh generation may your children's children's children never want for eggs.

Cover art: "Hen at High Noon"

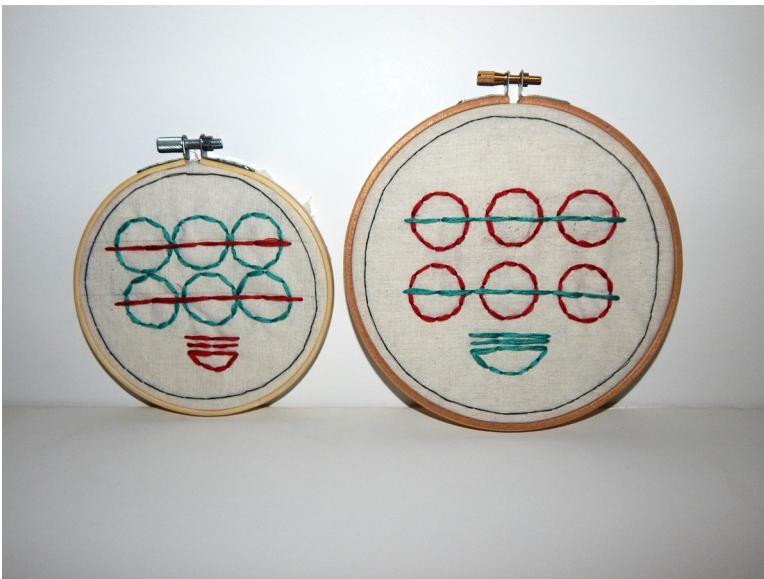

by Sorin Sukumaran

archaeopterxyz.wixsite.com/portfolio

Graphite, digital

Chicken and egg

Teri Anderson
@tinyteri13 on Instagram Embroidery thread on cotton canvas

Contents of the COOP:

Hen at High Noon by Sorin Sukumaran (archaeopterxyz.wixsite.com/portfolio)	Cover
My Lovely Neighbors by Ray	1
the chicken who dreamed by Sanjana Shankar	2
Momma's Prized Silkies by E.H Wesson	3
Doomed Chickens by Thomas Dunne	4
Chicks at the Store by NeoAsh	6
Haiku for a New Mother by Melanie Figg	7 sunny side up by alliyah	8
Verisimilitude by Thomas Jackson	9
Vincent by Thomas Jackson	10
Chicken Sketch #1 by Ray	11
Riddle by Paul Hostovsky	12
Chicken Sketch #2 by Ray	13
Chicken Quartet by Ray	14
we're not afraid by Selena Langner	15
Chicken Sketch #3 by Ray	17
The chicken under the sun by Zowabob	18
How about a little empathy by Colin Gee	19
Cacklefarts by Jeff Gallagher	20
Egg Song by Whitney Gratton	21
Chicken and egg by Teri Anderson	22
Blessing by Whitney Gratton	23
Editors' notes	24

Egg Song

Whitney Gratton
Digital

Cacklefarts

Jeff Gallagher

A Cheshire lad laid this before my eyes, Wrenched from a tired and battered tome:
Quaint earthy cant that leapt from the throat Surprising shy ears and the muddled mouth.

A bright mush of gibberish and war comic German, Lost through the years, brought briefly to life.
And there, in the corner, on a damp, dusty bookshelf,
And there, in the graves of illiterate landsmen,

Reclined all the life of an alien culture,
Its poetry, humour and accurate vision...
Yes! The crabbed, clumsy creatures squat at an angle;
With a squawk of discomfort they give up their prize,

Each cacklefart caught in a brown, wrinkled hand;
Till Victorian primness kills the life and the fun
Of the word's bold exactness; confines it to books.
Foul progress has killed it, as sure as eggs is eggs.

My Lovely Neighbors

Ray
clorofolle on Tumblr
Pen, watercolor pencil

the chicken who dreamed

Sanjana Shankar @infinitesmals on Twitter somewhere in alabama is an old english game hen in the dark.

it is not yet midnight, the stars twinkle like polished steel and she wonders how it would feel to be in the sky, glowing with no children to feed, no husband whose screams signal the dawn of a new day, no obligation to be anything but herself. to look down at the world under you, that is more than fences and manicured lawns or mouths to feed and hay to lay on. she does not know a life outside this, but she looks up at the sky and sees a shooting star. and she thinks if the stars can move on, so can she.

How about a little empathy

Colin Gee
@ColinMGee on Twitter

How about a little empathy for someone who only has 5 to 6 memories for a dinosaur on a dresser

The chicken under the sun

Zowabob
@zowabob on Instagram
Digital

Momma's Prized Silkies

E. H Wesson
@EHWesson on Instagram and Tumblr
Digital

Doomed Chickens

Thomas Dunne

A shout out to every chicken rendered Fit for breeding, feeding and slaughter
A hearty thanks for your life surrendered To feed ma and pa, and son and daughter

A sea of bobbing heads in frantic squawk Nameless, faceless and billions in number Blood-weary workers, numb and beyond fault Shock, stick and scald - then cut asunder

Meanwhile the marketers devise their smarm
As if selling widgets that never once lived Packaged with pictures of a tranquil farm Chicken and parts portioned and sieved

No sweet sound ever issued from thy throat Only piercing, pitched cries that rise from the ruck O! to steal you free and build you a cote Where I could hear your cackle, coo and cluck

I'd make death far distant from your harborous hutch
You can sing to the welkin your cacophonous song Or rest and nest and be broody with clutch
And never be slaughtered for doing no wrong

It's dark, the moon new, just an idea really, nothing but the Milky Way carved into the sky above.

Coyotes gonna get you, I whisper to myself, remembering nights as a child huddled next to the smoldering embers of a fire. I pad up the path, peeling away the darkness with my lantern, slipping under the Ponderosas, peering into the branches, trying to discern what's there.

I can tell the pack's far away, because when the howling starts, it ricochets through the hills.

I scamper the last few feet to the house, a double-wide just perched on the land, crunch through cinders in the driveway, slip inside. For a moment, the door gapes. I snug it closed, crank the deadbolt three times, twist it tight.

"There," I say, "that'll give you something to cry about."

Chicken Sketch #3

Ray
clorofolle on Tumblr
Pen, watercolor pencil

Far away, lightning flickers. There's no need to be scared.
It's too wet for a fire to start now.

But when I brought the pup home, it was a whole 'nother story. He was just a little thing, had about as much muscle tone as a tube sock, but that didn't stop the hens from squawking all over the pasture, 'till they summited the compost pile in a huff.

The pup just sat there, barely able to move on his still-limp legs. Eight weeks old, and just trying to make new friends. Made me think of my dad, back when I was just a kid. Story goes that back when I was a baby, I was in the car, and wouldn't stop screaming, crying, wailing, and Pops had nearly had enough of it. He was driving us up the dirt roads, and I just kept at it. Finally, the man broke. Grabbed my binky right out of my mouth and threw it out the window.

"There," he said, "that'll give you something to cry about." Didn't stop me from crying, but at least I had a reason after that.

So now I push drenched chickens into their houses, trying to keep them alive for one more night. After, I close their door and latch it with a worn-out dirty old brown hairband, wrap it three times tight around the nail I'd driven through the wood, and skitter back down the path toward the house.

O! "choicest of birds", over whom we lord Without your death we'd be pressed to survive Would you step from under Damocles' sword For a chance to live, though we be deprived?

Know this, all critters of the sea and sod Though your flesh be fated to earth-bound course Your soul is beaconed toward the gods and God And the light therein draws home to its Source

So chicken, no words of consolation
For your life and death so darkly immured Only deficient appreciation And vague hope 'twas not in vain endured

Chicks at the Store

NeoAsh

Little chickens at the store For twenty dollars and no more, Sweet little cheeps
With sweet little peeps Little baby chickens galore.

I wish I could take one home with me, You'd be in my yard running free
So much space
For your cute little face, If only such a thing could be.

Alas, the store has a trick
That makes me a bit heartsick,
To buy little chickens
With which you are smitten, You must get at least six.

We're not afraid

Selena Langner

@selenalangner on Twitter

"Coyotes gonna get you," I say, in a low, soft voice.

The ground sinks around me, prairie dog tunnels turned soft with rain. Thick red mud sticks to my clogs, climbs my bare feet, stains my ankles.

The Big Dipper reels on its handle overhead, like it's been kicked up by a bull and is still falling through the air, about to clatter onto the silver-white prairie floor. Rabbitbrush and fescue gleam.

"You can't go camping out here in the rain," I tell the chickens, watching them rearrange themselves. They're perched on the cinderblocks again, determined to sleep under the stars. I pick each one off with my bare hands, press each soggy hen to my chest and haul them indoors, chuckle to myself about how silly they are.

They never mind when I pick them up, just spread their wings low and flat, bent at the knees, pressed wide against the muddy ground, like they're telling me "we're not afraid of no coyotes."

They hoot and shuffle in their coop. No other sounds besides the clatter of the rain, barely there any more.

Chicken Quartet

Ray
chlorofolle on Tumblr
Pen, watercolor pencil

Haiku for a New Mother

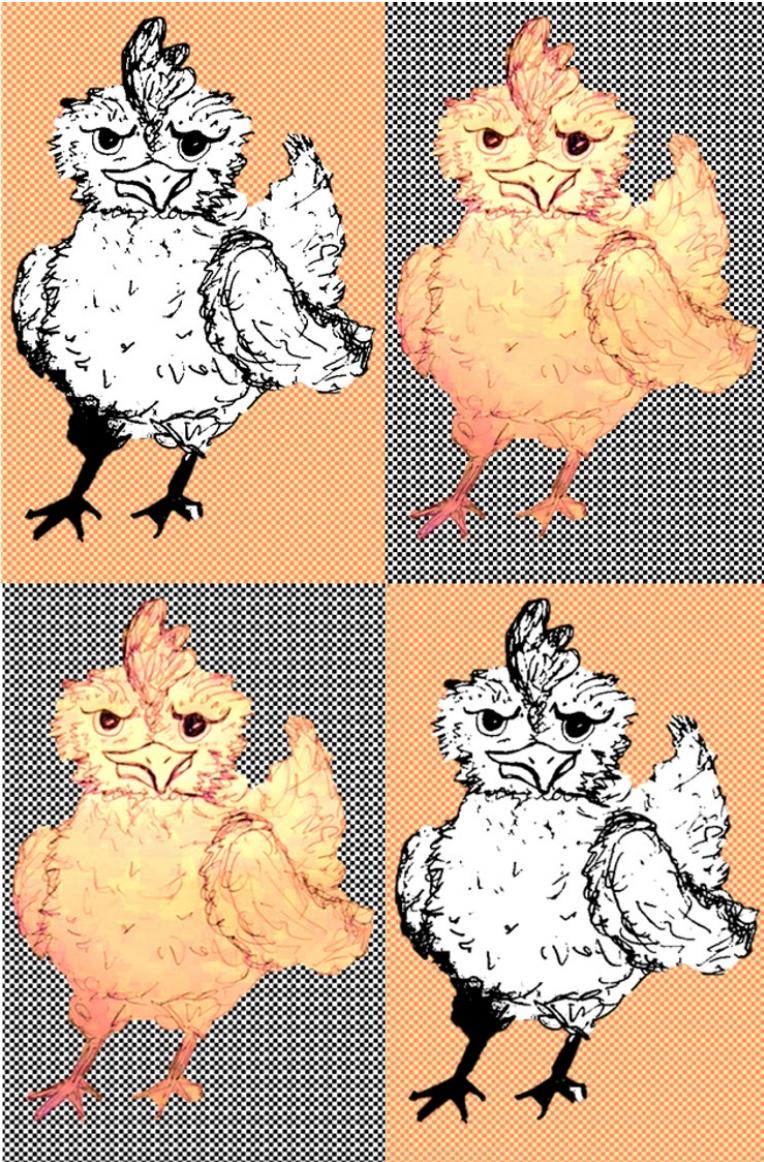

Melanie Figg
www.melaniefigg.net for Whitney

New mom is tired, Baby needs some comforting.
Chickens in the crib!

Soft chicken feathers flutter on her cheek. She coos while her baby sleeps.

Time to sleep, baby, mama sings her lullaby:
bock bock bock bock bock.

sunny side up alliayah youngwriterssociety.com Ink, digital

a road for its life. Now here's a question: This chicken that crossed the road to get to the other side, this white chicken that got to the green other side, is she alive or is she dead and just doesn't know it yet, having crossed a road with her head cut off, a head that thinks it got to another side?

Chicken Sketch #2

Ray
clorofolle on Tumblr
Pen

Riddle

Paul Hostovsky

Why is why the chicken crossed the road the only question ever asked? We know nothing of the chicken herself, or the road, or the nature of the crossing, only the reason for the crossing and that it was successful. Can you remember the first time you heard of this chicken? It was probably in grade school, on the schoolyard maybe, or waiting for the crossing guard, a friend putting the question to you apropos of crossing a road. Do you recall getting it right? No, of course not, no one did. It's so manifest we missed it, then fell in love with it forever. It became the whole story. It's an American story. It erased its own history, all trace of the farmhouse by the road in need of repairs, early spring, the forsythia bush yellowing in back of the peeling hen house, the ax sticking up out of the tree stump, blood all around, the dark blood everywhere, and one spring chicken running across

Verisimilitude

Thomas Jackson

@jtommyj on Instagram, @tommybbyboy on Twitter chickens pause in the run. their prowl for bugs stopped abruptly frozen in time. i turn to look behind, hoping to catch a glimpse of what's scared them into stillness, a pause that could elongate into death if special care isn't taken. i expect to see there, behind us, a man these birds have never met. & for a second i do, i see him as i hear clucking & rustling of feathered yellow tripod feet ripping up dirt, digging tap of corn-colored beaks scraping clay. i drag my hesitant gaze back forward feeling a twinge in my sleep-sore neck. when my eyes reach the flock i ask, expecting an answer, was it him that scared you? did you see him too? my mothercluckers don't pay me any mind walking about the run.

Vincent

Thomas Jackson

@tommyj on Instagram, @tommybbyboy on Twitter feathers black my little egg hen in sun emerald luster in shade obsidian i walk out to the run you're not there to greet me it's been months of nothing to do except falter under the weight of never saying goodbye to you held firmly in my arms while fox wounds bleed into my shirt taking pain from your body holding it in fibers as my own providing comfort as i did when you fit in the palm of my hand there's just a void behind the hens who remain where i used to direct my smile & a warm hello i can't pick 'n choose how deeply i mourn i lose sources of joy daily it's purgatory it's hell, i'd grieve the silence before the word i just spoke if given enough time to think; feel your nail tips tapping on my shoes, yet their white leather is bare when i reach down to pat ya ventricles palpitate, you weren't just a bird to me you're a void now, why scrounge the emptiness for peace?

felt better with you when my liver wasn't working properly smiled at you when i had no reason to i hope when you shut your eyes the final time you felt me crying in my sleep across state lines & didn't wonder where did you go why did you leave?

Chicken Sketch #1

Ray
clorofolle on Tumblr
Pen